The Long Alley (1446), Twitty's (1707) and Brick alley (1718) Almshouses are still in use today, administered by Christ's Hospital, a charitable trust dating from 1553 (the most ancient of Oxfordshire's charities.)

County Hall – The roof of this building is the scene for the unusual custom of bun throwing which started at the coronation of George III in 1760 and involves the Mayor and Councillors throwing buns to the people in the Market Square below, usually to commemorate Royal occasions. This tradition continues to the day and in 2012 bun throwing took place to celebrate Queen Elizabeth II's Diamond Jubilee.
